If contemplating a trip to the Buffalo Exposition, be sure you purchase the proper footwear before leaving. Those who attended the World's Fair and Paris Exposition know how necessarv it is to have comfortable and sensible walking

Our present line of footwear, both for ladies and men, has been carefully selected, and embraces all the latest and exclusive crea-

It is an established fact that foreign-made shoes are not designed to meet the requirements of Americans, ard if you intend crossing the water this summer be sure to purchase the necessary footwear on this side.

We are especially proud of our extensive display of shoes for travel, proper and fashionable effects in an endless variety of exclusive patterns.

There is no equal assortment of footwear so well adapted to outing wear as this-that is a positive fact. If you are going to purchase footwear for the "Fourth," then see our excellent assortment. We have met the great demand for linen and canvas shoes as we should. We are showing double the variety to be seen elsewhere.

We are particularly careful in the filling of orders received by mail, and when size and width of shoe desired is mentioned we seldom fail to make a satisfactory selection.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL.

Queen Fashion Has Gone and Dullness Reigns Supreme.

Wherever Gay Crowds Most Do Congregate on Mountain Top or by Seashore, Will Washingtonians Be Found - Many Going Abroad.

To say that the city is deserted is, of curse, a fiction that nobody is expected to believe. It sounds nice and conventional; is a delicate tribute to the importance of the social lights who are off on their summer meanderings and is taken good naturedly by the rank and file who are enjoying life contentedly at home. The breaking off of the Balfour-Sartoris engagement created quite a gust of excitement here, there and everywhere, but the death of Mr. Adelbert Hay so saddened the people of Washington inside of ociety and out that nobody seemed, after that, to want to know the whys and wherefores of pretty Miss Vivian's affair. It is just as well they did not, for detalls, so far, do not appear to be forthcoming from the other side. Of course there are theories enough to make material for a three-volume novel, but those who voice them have little more to base their stories on than an overripe imagination. Perhaps we will all know some day soon, and then again, perhaps we won't. As the old song says, "A pretty maid may change her mind and give no reason why." And the old song seems to

When Mrs. McKinley returned from ridng vesterday she looked so refreshed that there seems every probability that she will be able to go to Canton at the time planned. The other morning while the President's carriage was walting in a curve of the driveway under big shady trees a group of young men and women tourists learned, some way, that Mrs. Mc-Kinley was to go riding, and one of them, with a small kodak, stood alert with her eyes on the north portal and her camera half hidden under a cape, as though she feared detection. When the driver brought his team to the portico the young woman, fairly tense with excitement, got ready for a snap. Just as Mrs. McKinley appeared at the entrance, however, one of the men of the party, a big fellow in blue serge, deliberately placed himself in front of the young woman and there he stayed intil Mrs. McKinley was in her carriage and off. Then he apologized. "You see, if she had looked up and caught you it might have spoiled her ride," which, that men are more thoughtful than wo-

The report from Berlin that the Count and Countess von Waldersee will visit America next year and remain here three months is the more interesting because of the long absence of the countess in Europe, and because she is a native of New York, where she was born in 1838. She went abroad before the civil war and married in 1864 Prince Frederick of Schles-wig-Holstein-Louderburg-Augustenburg, who was afterward created Prince of Noer by the Emperor of Austria.
